THE UNPLUGGED ROOM

Why a room with no technology becomes everyone's favorite room

Be intentional about it, and watch what happens — the family gravitates to the one room with nothing to plug in.

"That room slowly becomes the place the family gravitates to."

 Boaz Strategic helps leaders build spaces that pull their family together, not apart.

Is it just a room, or their favorite place?

“ That room slowly becomes the place the family gravitates to. — Smokey Hurst, Pastor, BOLD Community Church

Smokey Hurst built a landscaping company from nothing before trading it for seminary and a pulpit.

One of his best ideas: a room in the house with no technology allowed.

No TV. No phones. No gaming system. Want entertainment? Create it — whether that's making music, playing a game, reading a book worth finishing, or just talking.

It sounds like a sacrifice. In practice, it's the room the family starts asking for.

There's nothing magic about the room itself. What changes is the absence of a screen to disappear into. Without one, people actually have to talk to whoever else is there.

It doesn't take a renovation. One room, one rule, and whatever analog entertainment you already own is enough to start.

Do it with intention, and watch where your family ends up spending their evenings.

At Boaz Strategic, we help leaders build spaces that pull their family together, not apart.
