

FAMILY & LEGACY

ROOTS, THEN WINGS

The gradual shift from parenting to trusted friendship

BOAZ
STRATEGIC

THE WINGS — LATER YEARS

Autonomy, trusted counsel, no judgment just loving perspective, freely given

THE TRUNK — ALWAYS

Quality time, knowing their uniqueness, speaking life, unconditional love

THE ROOTS — EARLY YEARS

Guardrails, guidance, training, and loving discipline

There's no formula that fits every child — some need more guidance, some need more room — but the trunk stays the same, no matter which child you're raising.

"There are only two lasting bequests we can give our children: roots and wings." — Hodding Carter Jr.

Boaz Strategic helps leaders build a legacy that lasts long after the parenting years end.

Will they visit out of duty, or desire?

“ There are only two lasting bequests we can give our children: roots and wings. — Hodding Carter Jr.

Every parent starts as a guardrail — setting boundaries, teaching right from wrong, offering correction a child didn't ask for and needed anyway.

That season has to end, or the relationship does.

As children grow into adults capable of their own decisions, the posture has to shift. “You must do this” slowly becomes the counsel of a trusted friend — offered when requested, never forced.

There's no formula that fits every child — but the goal is to shift from parent to friend.

What doesn't change is the trunk: quality, intentional time — truly knowing them and their strengths and preferences, so you can speak life over them, and unconditional love.

That means resisting the urge to critique what wasn't asked for — instead offering a listening ear and encouragement that they'll make the right choices.

Trust them, even knowing they'll sometimes fail.

At Boaz Strategic, we help leaders build a legacy their children choose to stay close to.
